— The best English railway engineers me-tion that a coel line, to be successful, mu be capable of being worked at modern speeds, and without interference with oth-troffic. This is indispensable. If coultrail of forty or fifty tenels, each eccutaining for or five tons of coal, are to be drawn at his speed, or are to be shunted at every oth-sization to make way for fast trains, the r galt must be such additions to the coal-working as must preclude the possibility railway coul traffic being retract. In success ful competition with the sea coal trade. ---Second Lioux, Hearty Stone, ist Wis. Vol., April, 4, 1933.
